Session 96: Objective and Subjective Individual World Balance

Original Question:

He asks the entity(ies): when you have talked to us about the ways of expanding our consciousness, having a growth in consciousness, that seems to me that it maybe related to our earthly concept here of evolution. Are we in illusions and aspect of thought, when we think in terms of evolution here?

What kind of relationship should be between, what we call the lower animals, and the men, being seen in the evolutionary scheme of things, as the highest form of the animal kingdom?

What are the mankind relations to the other species of life that occupies the earth; some of them we domesticate and make friends of some of them we domesticate and use for our food, we slaughter them and eat them, and there's much debate on earth about what our relationship should be with the dogs, birds, the fishes, and we think we can communicate with certain species like the whales, the dolphins, certain apes and we cannot communicate with others.

Summary:

First part of this tape is a discussion about objectivity and subjectivity, how the individuals use them in life, and how finding the balance between them can expand the individual's consciousness. The second part is explaining the relationship between humans and animals, through the objective and subjective perspectives.
